

The purpose of The French American Fund is to give graduate students and early mid-career researchers in international relations a unique opportunity to learn about Capitol Hill, U.S. Congress and Senate, as well as the American legislative process. Fellowships in the House of Representatives and Senate run from late August to December or from January to May.

The Washington Center

- In addition to Capitol Hill fellowship assignments, students will enroll in one of the 30 available courses offered by TWC. This program also gives students additional tools to launch their career upon completion of their studies.

Students can select courses in U.S. Foreign Policy and International Relations, Philosophy of Law and The Supreme Court, International Human Rights. Courses at The Washington Center include active, experiential and reflective learning.

Congressional Fellowships

provide a unique approach to international relations, global economics, intercultural relations, globalization, leadership and global governance culture.

For students with an interest in foreign policy, international affairs, cultural diplomacy, political science, or international economics, the program provides a platform from which students can gain hands on experience and high level knowledge and relationships.
